

Devotional to be on excellence in BYU education

Kristine Hansen, associate dean of General Education and Honors, and associate professor of English at BYU, will speak at today's Devotional in the de Jong Concert Hall at 11 a.m.

Hansen's topic, "Lift Thine Eyes to the Mountains," will be on the aims of a BYU education.

"BYU can achieve its destiny only if the students are fully engaged in working toward the aims," she said.

Hansen earned both her bachelor's degree in English and a master's in teaching English as a second language from BYU. She earned her Ph.D. in English from the University of Texas at Austin.

She teaches advanced writing, rhetoric, pedagogy and research methods. Hansen is also the chair of the University Writing Committee.

Hansen has been honored as an Alvin Fellow and with the Karl G. Maeser Professor of General Education award.

Hansen said she will discuss some ways students can actively seek to realize the aims of a BYU education in their lives.

"Achieving these aims is part of seeking excellence and eternal life," she said.

Aspen Grove family camp is dedicated

President Thomas S. Monson, First Counselor in the First Presidency of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, dedicated the Aspen Grove Family Camp and Conference Center Sunday.

"At the right time, at the right place, God had raised someone up (to develop Aspen Grove)," President Monson said.

"I believe our Heavenly Father has watched over the development of all aspects of this mammoth project," he said.

The new conference center accommodates more than 250 guests and the lodge contains 20 recently completed guestrooms.

Former BYU President Franklin S. Harris established Aspen Grove as BYU's summer school in 1922. Staff and students lived in tents and studied botany, zoology and geology.

In 1962, the camp was established as a family camp, and it officially opened for business July 13, 1963.

"Thanks be to God for the pioneers who made this camp possible," President Monson said.

Cheney returns to White House with pacemaker

WASHINGTON — Vice President Dick Cheney returned to work Monday with a new heart pacemaker in his chest, promoting the energy strategy he assembled for the administration and attending his usual series of White House meetings. "His spirits are high," President Bush said.

Cheney entered the building at 7:45 a.m. — in plenty of time for a session with Bush.

"The vice president's feeling great," Bush told reporters afterward. "I was confident he would be there at 8 o'clock sharp during our national security briefing, and there he was."

Bush said Cheney "sets a good example for Americans who may share the same condition he has, and that is to listen to your body, take precautionary measures, and to be active."

After meeting with Bush and White House chief of staff Andrew Card, Cheney was fielding energy questions from reporters in three radio interviews, spokeswoman Juleanna Weiss said.

Vapors pollute Seven Peaks

Twelve children became ill while at the Seven Peaks Water Park in Provo Monday, showing symptoms typical of an acid spill, said a representative from the Provo Fire Department.

"(The children) felt respiratory problems. They were coughing a little bit, and said they couldn't quite catch their breath," said Coy Porter, deputy chief at the Provo Fire Department and public information officer. These symptoms are typical of an acid spill, he said.

All the children exhibiting symptoms were taken to be decontaminated but none were transported to the hospital by the paramedics, Porter said. They were immediately taken to first aid, he said.

"Two or three of them were taken by their parents to either their local physician or the emergency room, but as soon as they were out of the area, there were no further complaints," Porter said.

The fire department called in a hazardous materials team in addition to the fire trucks and paramedics to investigate the affected areas and to determine whether or not there was an acid leak.

The hazardous materials team performed acid-base tests on the lazy river and several smaller pools. The results indicate there was not an acid leak, he said.

Porter said the children might have been affected by acid vapors from muriatic acid being delivered to the park.

Muriatic acid is a mild acid used to keep pipes from building up with hard water deposits, he said.

The acid is pumped through a siphon tube from the pump house to the rest of the park, Porter said.

"It's a very safe mode of using this acid and it's used by a lot of different pools," he said.

The fire department closed the lazy river attraction and some of the smaller pools as a precautionary measure, but anticipated reopening them later in the day.

Anne Kitchen, 34, a season ticket holder at Seven Peaks from Provo, was inside the park at the time of the closures.

She was with a group of children, ages 2 through 7, who were affected by the acid vapors.

"There were some children sent to the hospital vomiting and burning in the throat, coughing, things like that," she said.

Kitchen said she decided to leave the park earlier than anticipated that day because the park didn't smell clean and her throat felt scratchy.

refunded the cost of eight of the tickets for her group because some of the children had to be taken to the hospital.

Heidi Kirby, 31, from Pleasant Grove, a season ticket holder at Seven Peaks Water Park, said all of the contaminated areas of the park were opened again a little after noon.

"No one seems to know what happened," she said.

Paul Mix, the general manager of the water park, referred all comments to Porter, the public information officer, but he did say that the park was still open.

"I can say that everybody involved — including the park — is all stable," he said.

Porter said the fire department was called because "Seven Peaks was just taking a proactive stance to make sure there were no further problems."

The fire department determined there was no further danger from the acid vapors and the park remained open during its normal hours for the rest of the day.

The dry season is a danger for increased grass fires. Fireworks especially could cause grassfires like the one on Timpview Drive last week. Workers kept the fire at bay by hosing down smoldering weeds.

Police to enforce fireworks safety

By Scott M. Brady
brady@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

Fireworks explode with brilliance, attracting not only patriotic audiences but also causing consequences from illegal use.

"Fireworks are not allowed on BYU property — that even means sparklers," said Boyd Johnson, fire marshal for BYU.

Jim Guynn, fire investigator for Provo City, said because of the drought situation, everything is getting really dry, really fast.

"We will aggressively enforce firework codes this year along with the police department in an effort to curtail these fires caused by illegal and legal, but irresponsibly used fireworks," he said.

"We would certainly encourage people to go to the commercially available firework shows and curtail their involvement with fireworks," he said.

According to Chapter 9.43 of the State Fireworks Act, it is unlawful to discharge a firework within 300 feet of any church, hospital, rest home, retirement center, school building or similar institution.

It is also unlawful to ignite, discharge or throw any fireworks from or into any motor vehicle or at or near any person.

Guynn said fireworks accounted for a number of fires last year, and the suppression costs go right back to the residents of Provo.

"It's their tax dollars at work trying to suppress these fires that are started by careless or irresponsible individuals using fireworks," he said.

The fire department advises that fireworks not be used in an area likely to result in a fire and that residents keep a hose nearby.

"Children should not be allowed to light a firework at all," Guynn said. "And teenagers should be closely supervised, if they are involved."

Wayne Watson, administrative director for emergency and trauma at Utah Valley Regional Medical Center, said hospital officials find hand and eye injuries when people have held on to fireworks before they go off.

"We see a lot of eye injuries where either ash or sparks have flown into the eye," he said. "There may also be some smoke inhalation problems that may irritate the lining of the throat or lungs."

Watson said they also see serious injuries related to black powder or illegal fireworks.

"Sparklers seem pretty innocent," he said. "But if they're not put somewhere specific after they burn, then kids may walk on them and burn their feet."

Consumers up spending, keeping economy afloat

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Consumers shopped up a storm in May despite the choppy economy and a rash of layoffs.

The Commerce Department reported Monday that consumer spending rose by 0.5 percent in May, slightly faster than many analysts were forecasting. In April, spending went up by a revised 0.5 percent, a bit stronger showing than the government reported a month ago.

Consumer spending has been a key force keeping the economy afloat. In May, the strength largely reflected a jump in purchases of big-ticket manufactured goods, such as cars.

On Wall Street, stocks edged higher, lifted in part by the news that consumers are continuing to spend. The Dow Jones industrial average rose around 51 points and the Nasdaq was up around 4 points in morning trading.

Americans' incomes rose in May for the second month in a row by 0.2 percent, a tad weaker than many analysts were expecting.

The spending and income figures aren't adjusted for inflation.

When consumer spending is adjusted for inflation, it grew by a more moderate 0.3 percent in May, compared with the unadjusted 0.5 percent increase, which includes the costs of higher priced energy products.

Consumer spending accounts for two-thirds of all economic activity and has been a main pillar propping up the country's economy.

Construction spending rose by a bigger-than-expected 0.3 percent in May, following a 0.4 percent rise the month before, the latest evidence of the industry's resilience in the face of the economic slowdown.

Spending on big government projects rose by a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 4.3 percent; spending on multifamily housing grew at a rate of 2.4 percent, while spending on single-family homes increased at a rate of 0.9 percent. The value of commercial construction fell at a rate of 3.3 percent. Lower interest rates is a key reason the construction and housing markets have remained stable.

A key gauge of industrial activity rose in June but still was at a level indicating that the manufacturing sector of the economy remained in recession.

The National Association of Purchasing Management said its purchasing index increased to 44.7 percent last month from the 42.1 percent it reported in May. An index above 50 signifies growth in manufacturing, while a figure below 50 shows contraction.

Analysts were heartened that the index regained some lost ground and were hopeful that the steep slide in the index seen earlier in the year may be coming to an end.

Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan has said one of the biggest factors determining whether the country will skirt a recession is how well consumers hold up during the economic slowdown, which has gripped the nation since the second half of last year.

The Fed has slashed interest rates six times this year in an effort to revive the economy. The most recent reduction, of a quarter-point, came last week. The other five cuts were by a bolder half-point a piece.

The economy barely grew in the first three months of this year, expanding at an annual rate of 1.2 percent, and many believe it did worse in the recently ended second quarter. Many economists predict that the economy grew by a meager 0.5 percent in the April-June quarter and that the period probably will mark the low point in the economic slowdown.

Most analysts believe growth will rebound near the end of the year as the Fed's interest-rate cuts and Congress tax-cut refunds take hold.

In May, spending on durables rose by 1.2 percent, following a tiny 0.1 percent increase. That was the strongest showing since February.

Airline merger on verge of breakup

CHICAGO — United Airlines and US Airways said Monday that they are in discussions to abandon their planned $4.3 billion merger.

The announcement came after a person familiar with the approval said United is dropping the acquisition because the carrier is convinced the merger will not win regulatory approval.

"UAL Corporation and US Airways Group Inc. have confirmed that they are in discussions regarding the possibility of terminating the proposed merger between the two companies," the airlines said.

The carriers said they would make no further comment for the time being.

The source, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the UAL-owned United informed US Airways on Friday that it wanted to discuss terminating the 13-month-old agreement. The person confirmed reports in several Monday papers, including the Chicago Tribune, The New York Times and USA Today.

Police shoot man after stabbing children

SYRACUSE, N.Y. — Police fatally shot a man after he stabbed his three young sons, killing two of them, as their mother watched helplessly through a locked window.

Cuong Tran was killed late Saturday night by an officer who found him standing over one of the children. The policeman fired when Tran, 33, lunged at him with a knife.

"This has left a lot of people shaken," said Sgt. David Sackett, a police spokesman. "This happened right before the mother's eyes and our officers were already inside when they realized what was happening."

Two of the children — Randy, 5, and Danny, 6 — died in the attack. The third brother, 7-year-old Andy, was in serious but stable condition Monday morning. The mother was not injured.

Investigators did not know what caused the attack, Sackett said.

Court rules in favor of homosexuals

ALBANY, N.Y. — A medical school's policy of allowing married students — but not homosexual partners — to share college housing may violate New York City anti-discrimination statutes, the state's highest court ruled Monday.

The Court of Appeals ruled that a lesbian couple should be allowed to sue Yeshiva University for bias based on sexual orientation. The decision overturned two lower courts, which found that the college's policy was not discriminatory because it applied to not only homosexual couples but also to unmarried heterosexual couples.

The Court of Appeals sent the case back to a trial court.

The lesbian students, Sara Levin and Maggie Jones, have graduated from Yeshiva University's Albert Einstein College of Medicine in the Bronx. They are no longer a couple, Levin said after attending arguments in the case before the Court of Appeals in April.

The case is being pursued by the American Civil Liberties Union, the Lambda Legal Defense and Education Fund and other anti-discrimination groups.

Mercury thermometers not recommended

CHICAGO — The American Academy of Pediatrics says doctors and parents should stop using mercury thermometers, a once-ubiquitous household item that is already on its way to the medical junkyard.

Alternatives such as digital thermometers are widely available. If mercury thermometers are broken, the body can absorb the vapors. In addition, burning and other inadequate disposal of the thermometers can release mercury into streams.

Long-term exposure to mercury can cause neurological damage in children. Mercury-contaminated fish can cause fetal damage if eaten by pregnant women.

Several cities and hospitals have banned mercury thermometers and some major store chains have stopped selling them, but "there's a lot of them in medicine cabinets," said Alexis Cain, a scientist with the Environmental Protection Agency. "Having a doctors group say we can do without this" is helpful.

Raving banker steps down

Associated Press

SALT LAKE CITY — Each weekday morning, Dale Gibbons put on a dark suit, got into his white sport utility vehicle and drove from his million-dollar suburban home to his job as chief financial officer at Utah's oldest bank.

But on Saturday nights, Gibbons donned leather pants, hopped into his silvery Jaguar and cruised downtown Salt Lake City's hottest dance clubs. When the bars shut down, he often invited the young crowd back to his house for all-night raves that investigators say were fueled by illegal drugs — Ecstasy, GHB and methamphetamine.

Gibbons, 41, is charged with methamphetamine possession, child endangerment and dealing in material harmful to a minor. Last week he resigned from Zions Bancorp., founded in the 19th century by Brigham Young.

"Here he was, living in this conservative neighborhood and working a conservative job at Utah's most conservative bank, and he was living this kind of life on the side," said sheriff's Sgt. Darren Carr. "It's hard to imagine."

In stepping down from his bank job, Gibbons said in a statement: "I cannot effectively execute my obligations and duties to the company with criminal charges pending. As an innocent man, my focus must be on the court proceedings ahead."

The balancing act came crashing down in late June when Gibbons, who is divorced, called 911 in a panic early one morning. A young woman who had been raped had tried to kill herself by overdosing on drugs, he said.

Paramedics and police found Gibbons' 19-year-old girlfriend, whose friends worried about her increasingly erratic behavior, naked and unconscious in Gibbons' bed. His 15-year-old daughter — who neighbors say was often locked out of the house during the day — was found passed out in her pajamas.

Both were rushed to the hospital for treatment of drug and alcohol overdoses.

In a search after Gibbons' arrest, deputies found nearly a gram of methamphetamine in a nightstand in the master bedroom.

"We are all stunned and saddened by these allegations," Zions chief executive Harris Simmons said in a statement shortly after Gibbons was suspended by the bank.

SCRIPTURE OF THE DAY

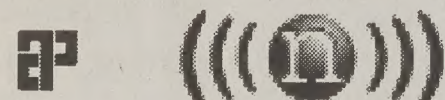

"And again, I remember that thou hast said that thou hast loved the world, even unto the laying down of thy life for the world, that thou mightest take it again to prepare a place for the children of men. And now I know that this love which thou hast had for the children of men is charity: wherefore, except men shall have charity they cannot inherit that place which thou hast prepared in the mansions of thy Father."

— Ether 12: 33-34

Kenny Lee, 19, from Las Vegas, Nev., who has not yet declared a major, likes this scripture because "it is the full definition of charity. Christ loved us so he sacrificed his life that we may be saved."

Pres. Bateman appoints new VP's Church program

By Eric Rasmussen
eric@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

In a continued effort to expand the international reach of BYU, President Merrill J. Bateman appointed Sandra Rogers as the vice president for International Affairs and Erlend D. Peterson as the associate vice president for International Affairs.

"As the university increasingly reaches out with its international programs, we are very pleased to have our Board of Trustees recognize BYU's international efforts and approve these appointments," President Bateman said.

The primary responsibilities of the new appointees will be the David M. Kennedy Center for International Studies, the Ambassadorial Visits Program and the study abroad programs.

They will oversee BYU's relationship with 25 international universities and work with the Division of Continuing Education in coordinating international outreach activities.

"There are many different international activities and efforts all over campus," Rogers said. "The creation of this office is a way to help them work together. My first goal is to learn from people on campus what would help them best."

Rogers, who had been serving as BYU's associate academic vice president for international, distance and continuing education, has broad experience in the international arena.

She has studied, served and worked in countries such as the Philippines, Nigeria, Jordan and Romania.

"Her wise management of the university's outreach programs these past several years has greatly helped focus BYU's resources, which, in turn, has allowed us to create strong and viable relationships with a number of international universities," President Bateman said.

Peterson became involved in BYU's international efforts in 1973 when he was named an assistant dean of the Division of Admissions and Records and given responsibility for BYU's international scholarship programs. In 1985, he was appointed an associate of the Kennedy Center and in 1990 was named dean of Admissions and Records.

Erlend D. Peterson

"I'm really pleased with the president's vision and initiative to increase BYU's international involvement," Peterson said.

"We've always had a very strong international program at BYU. I believe these appointments provide greater opportunities for the future," he said.

Peterson brings years of experience in building and maintaining international relationships to his new position, President Bateman said.

Sandra Rogers

Peterson recently accompanied the BYU Ballroom Dance Team on a stop in Washington D.C.

Twenty-five European ambassadors witnessed one of the team's programs. Peterson said Spain's ambassador said he would do whatever it took to get the team to visit his country.

"That's the sort of thing we're trying to do," Peterson said. "We're looking at what we can do to better assist what we're already doing as a university."

Church program aids poor, needy

By Emiko Lowe
emiko@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

Lives are touched each day by the welfare and humanitarian programs of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints as life sustaining goods and services are provided locally and worldwide.

"Our basic belief is that everyone is our brother and our sister. Wherever they are and whatever religion they are, if they are in need and we have the resources, we should help them," said Dean Walker, unit manager of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints Humanitarian Center.

Larry Crenshaw, director of welfare administration for the Church of Jesus Christ said in the last 15 years humanitarian efforts have spanned across 147 countries to people of all faiths.

"It's a wonderful time in the history of the world when we are reaching throughout the earth to serve the poor and needy, both church members and those not of our faith," he said.

Seventy-eight million pounds of clothing was shipped out to various places in the world from 1988 to 2001.

This clothing was donated through 47 Deseret Industries stores located in seven western states, he said.

Crenshaw said volunteers are a critical element to making the system work.

"We reach out to help those who are in need, but we do so with people who donate their time, talent and skills," he said.

According to a welfare services fact sheet, 408,588 days of labor were donated to the church welfare facilities last year.

Melvin Smith, resident of Sug-arhouse, Salt Lake County, works four to five days a week as a humanitarian service missionary.

The best thing about serving here is seeing the many miracles that occur, he said.

"Last Memorial Day, a little girl requested a special wheelchair. We had one, but the wheels were bent. The very next morning two brand new wheelchairs were donated," Smith said.

Not far from the Humanitarian Center is Welfare Square, where service is rendered mainly to the local community.

Welfare Square spreads over 17 acres and has a bakery, a cannery, a dairy plant, a granary, a quality assurance laboratory, a bishop's storehouse, a Deseret Industries store, and a visitor's center.

Products ranging from bread and milk to soap and shampoo are manufactured and distributed to those in need.

Floyd Moon, volunteer guide at welfare square and resident of Salt Lake City, said a lot of the labor comes from volunteers and from people who have been helped.

Crenshaw said he believes the best way for BYU students to help the humanitarian effort is through the regular payment of tithes and offerings and service.

"It is through the contribution of the fast offering that blessings are derived to the giver, the church, and those who the church helps with those donations," he said.

Crenshaw said the church's humanitarian and welfare efforts are known for their quality.

"What we do, we do extremely well," Crenshaw said. "We are rapidly becoming one of the key members of the humanitarian and charitable world."

Engineers place third at competition

By Marc Stevens

A team of students from BYU's Electrical and Computer Engineering Departments has developed a product that could make a paramedic's job easier and help save countless lives.

The Poket Doktor, a microchip-embedded card that carries medical information, earned the students a third place prize at the world finals of the Computer Society International Design Competition June 24 and 25 in Arlington, Va.

The BYU team was awarded a $6,000 prize for its work, and earned an additional $6,000 scholarship fund for the engineering department.

The Poket Doktor is a prototype of a credit card-like device that uses Bluetooth technology, a new form of wireless technology that uses a radio link to transfer information between digital appliances within 60 feet of each other.

The Poket Doktor would be used to relay medical information at the scene of an accident — a potential lifesaver for a patient unable to communicate with paramedics.

The project was part of a senior engineering class taught by Michael Wirthlin, assistant professor of electrical and computer engineering.

The students' assignment was to use the new Bluetooth technology to create a special-purpose computer device that would also benefit society.

"We wanted to give the students a chance to experience a situation similar to the industry," he said.

The class was divided into teams, and their ideas were later presented to two industry professionals and a computer science professor.

The Poket Doktor team was selected to represent BYU at the competition in Virginia. Of 250 team applications, 75 were chosen to submit project reports to the Institute of Electrical and Electronics Engineers' Computer Society.

A panel of international judges reviewed the reports, and BYU was one of the teams chosen to compete in the final competition.

"I'm glad they were able to go," Wirthlin said. "It's a reward for all the hard work they put in."

Peter Jones, a senior from Provo, Cache County, majoring in electrical engineering, said the project was important to him because of the potential it has to save someone's life and benefit society.

"It's a chance to use what we've been learning; to put it into application," Jones said.

He said this is the first time this kind of project has been attempted, placing the university on the developmental forefront.

"When we graduate we can say we've actually done things that I think a lot of students in other universities don't get the opportunity to do," said David Vawdrey, a senior from Riverton, Salt Lake County, majoring in computer engineering.

After nearly 35 years of vacancy, the old Brigham Young Academy Building displays a new face. As years of planning and work come to a close, the Provo City Library at Academy Square will tentatively open its doors to the public in September.

Old legacy finds new purpose

By Dave Buer
buer@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

The transformation of the Academy Building into the Provo Library at Academy Square is nearly complete.

The project, costing nearly $23 million, is expected to be completed near the end of the month, said Gene Nelson, director of the Provo Library.

A tentative opening of the library is planned for Pioneer Week in July, followed by a grand opening in September.

Originally opened in 1892, the Brigham Young Academy Building became the heart of the fledgling school, renamed Brigham Young University in 1903, according to a timeline provided by Terry Ann Harward, library executive assistant.

The critical role of Academy Square, which included the Academy and other school buildings, began to diminish when the University dedicated University Hill as the site of the "University of Zion" in 1908, according to the timeline.

The Academy continued to be used to teach subjects like chemistry, geology and art and also contained a library, high school classes and dorm facilities, said Lee Bartlett, president of Brigham Young Academy Foundation.

In 1968, the Academy Building closed its doors, beginning more than three decades of neglect and abuse.

The transformation of the Academy Building has required the talents of some of the nation's most respected artisans and artists.

Woodwork on the 19th century building has been recreated by BDL Mills.

Woodworkers for the company imitated the moldings and hand-carved rosettes that are indicative of the high-end nature of the building.

A stained glass window entitled, "Passages of Light," designed by Mac Magleby, creative director for the University Press at BYU, is a metaphor using glass and light to depict a view of Utah Lake at sunset, with a woman on the shore reading a book whose pages turn into a flying dove, Magleby said.

"As the person reads passages in the book, the light of truth and knowledge is opened up and can take flight," Magleby said.

Another stained glass window will be brought home to the building after spending years in a garage in California, Harward said.

The window was taken when two residents removed the piece after they saw other windows being broken by vandals, she said.

The window has been returned and minor repairs have restored it to its original condition, she said.

The new library will have a permanent art gallery — a natural fit for the building that used to house the art department of the Brigham Young Academy.

Other artists contributing to the exhibit include Wulf Barsch, Kristen Payson, William Whittaker, Wayne Kimball, Bruce Brainard, Laura Lee Stay Bradshaw and Ron Richmond.

WC honors Cougar trio

Three BYU basketball players have been named to the academic Mountain West Conference honor roll on Wednesday. Nathan Cooper, Eric Nielsen and Trent Whiting were among 15 players named to the team.

It's pretty shocking to tell you that Whiting, who has been named to the honor roll for the first time, is also thinking about playing professional basketball in Europe.

"I've talked to teams from France, Sweden, Lithuania, Italy and Spain," he said.

Last year, Whiting started 25 of the 26 games he played. He averaged 35 minutes per game and shot .432 from the field. He was a 39 percent three-point shooter and was an 82 percent free throw shooter. Overall, he averaged 14.2 points and 3.2 rebounds per game.

Nielsen is the lone returning Cougar from this year's academic All-Conference team.

Last year, he started 27 games, averaged 22.5 minutes per game and led the team with a .606 field goal percentage. He was a 77 percent free throw shooter. He also averaged 3.8 rebounds per game.

Whiting, another senior from last season, said he plans to continue his basketball career.

"I'll probably play in the Jazz summer camp and then if I do well, I'll probably be able to play in the review," he said.

He also has a chance to play in the Los Angeles Clippers' and the Cleveland Cavaliers' summer camps. He said he hopes his time in the camp will get him exposure and will cause NBA scouts to take notice. Whiting is also thinking about playing professional basketball in Europe.

Ichiro's M's dominate All-Star voting

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Seattle outfielder Ichiro Suzuki became the first rookie to draw the most votes and was among four Mariners elected by fans Monday to start next week's All-Star game at Safeco Field.

Cal Ripken, who will retire after this season, overtook Seattle's David Bell in the final week to earn his 17th start and 19th appearance. The Baltimore third baseman made up a 44,000-vote difference to pass Bell and Anaheim's Troy Glaus.

Boosted by paper ballots cast in Japan for the first time and online support worldwide, Suzuki received 3,373,035 votes and was the first rookie to be elected since Sandy Alomar Jr. for Cleveland in 1990. The 27-year-old right fielder leads the majors in hits and stolen bases.

The Mariners, with the best record in the majors, also will have first baseman John Olerud, second baseman Bret Boone and designated hitter Edgar Martinez in the starting lineup next Tuesday in their home ballpark.

The last team to have four elected starters was Cleveland in 1999 — Roberto Alomar, Manny Ramirez, Kenny Lofton and Jim Thome. Had Bell beat out Ripken, the Mariners would have become the first team with five elected starters since Cincinnati in 1977.

Barry Bonds, leading the majors with 39 home runs, drew an NL-leading 2,140,315 votes. The San Francisco outfielder will be making his eighth start and his 10th All-Star appearance.

Giants' second baseman Jeff Kent and shortstop Rich Aurilia also drew starts. They are the first NL middle infielders to be elected from the same team since Ozzie Smith and Tommy Herr of St. Louis in 1985.

Alex Rodriguez, who left the Mariners after last season as a free agent and signed with Texas, drew his fourth start at shortstop. Rangers catcher Ivan Rodriguez earned his ninth consecutive start and 10th appearance overall.

Also starting for the AL are outfielders Juan Gonzalez of Cleveland and Ramirez of Boston.

New York Mets catcher Mike Piazza earned his seventh start and ninth All-Star appearance. His status is uncertain, however, because of a broken toe.

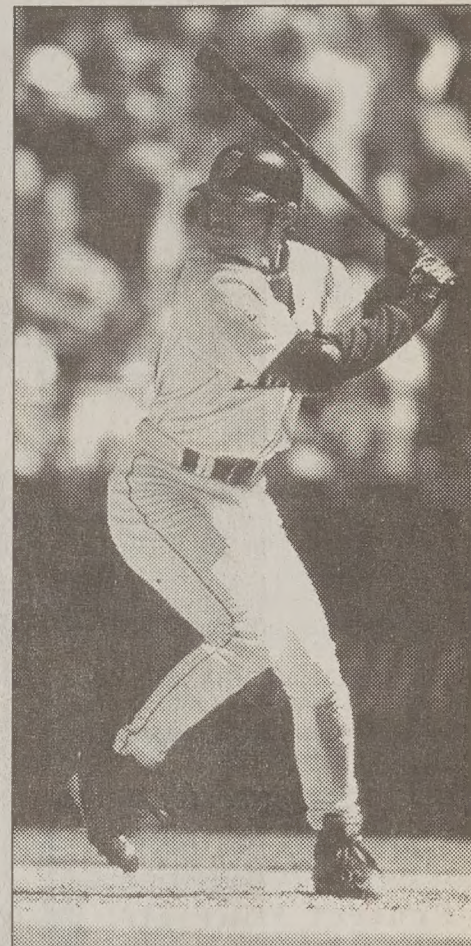

The other NL starters are outfielders Sammy Sosa of the Chicago Cubs and Luis Gonzalez of Arizona, first baseman Todd Helton of Colorado and third baseman Chipper Jones of Atlanta.

The pitchers and reserves and the rest of the 30-man rosters will be announced Wednesday.

Retiring San Diego star Tony Gwynn, who finished 10th among NL outfielders, is expected to be picked by NL manager Bobby Valentine of the Mets. New York Yankees manager Joe Torre will guide the AL.

Boone, leading the AL with 80 RBIs, Aurilia, Helton and Luis Gonzalez were elected for the first time.

Suzuki received 1,217,680 online votes. There were 716,325 online ballots cast in the final week after stadium voting closed.

Teen dethrones Wimbledon king Pete

Associated Press

WIMBLEDON, England — Pete Sampras' masterful run at Wimbledon ended stunningly Monday, his bid for a record-tying eighth title stopped by teenager Roger Federer.

The defending champion and winner of seven Wimbledon titles since 1993, Sampras was upset 7-6 (7), 5-7, 6-4, 6-7 (2), 7-5 in the fourth round.

It's his earliest exit at the grass-court event in 10 years.

"It was his moment," Sampras said. "It's grass-court tennis. One minute you feel like you have it, the next minute you're walking off the court."

The loss ended Sampras' 31-match Wimbledon winning streak, his chance to match Bjorn Borg's five consecutive titles from 1976-80, and his attempt to tie Willie Renshaw's record of eight overall championships, set in the 1880s.

All at the hands of the 19-year-old Federer, who lost in the first round in both of his other appearances at Wimbledon and has one career title to Sampras' 63.

"I fought from the first to last point," Federer said. "It's a great feeling I've never had before."

He never lost his composure and used a strong serve to keep Sampras off-balance.

When Federer hit a forehand on a return to break Sampras' serve and win the match, he dropped to his knees, rolled on his side and put a hand over his face. Then he stood and shook Sampras' hand.

Federer raised his arms and blew a kiss to the crowd, then cried as he collected his equipment. Sampras sat down briefly before the players walked off together.

Federer, a Swiss player seeded 15th, is one of the best young talents on the tour. He was the Wimbledon junior champion in 1998 and won his first ATP title in Milan last February.

At the French Open last month, he lost to eventual runner-up Alex Corretja in the quarterfinals.

The 29-year-old Sampras has a record 13 Grand Slam championships and was seeded first here. He won Wimbledon from 1993-95 and 1997-2000, losing to eventual champion Richard Krajicek in the 1996 quarterfinals.

Sampras is ranked only sixth, partially because he played only 10 tournaments this year before Wimbledon — and won none.

Forever is a long time to live with a mistake.

Freedom Festival sponsors blood drive

By Allison Carland
allison@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

The Freedom Festival and Mountain View Hospital blood drive at the Provo Towne Centre on Saturday tried to replenish the supply of blood in Provo and surrounding communities, said a recruiter.

Jody Jenkins, a recruiter for the blood bank at Mountain View Hospital, had hoped the drive would collect 40 units of blood. It turned out to be a slow day, however, and only 19 units of blood were collected.

Due to a scheduling conflict the blood drive was moved from its advertised location at the Historic County Courthouse to the Provo Towne Centre on Saturday. Since the drive changed locations twice, many citizens may not have known where to go to donate blood, said Jenkins.

On Saturday morning Freedom Festival Executive Director Ren Allred said he thought the mall would be a good place to attract residents to give blood. A free T-shirt was given to participants in the blood drive.

Te Koi and Cherry Smith, of Salt Lake City, were one of a few shoppers who saw the blood drive signs and decided to stop. The Smith's said they give blood every time they get a chance.

Other residents, such as Dennie Borland of Provo, read about the blood drive in the paper and found the location despite the move to the mall. Borland said she has given blood regularly since she was a teenager.

Borland knows the importance of giving blood from personal experience. When her son needed blood after a serious accident, Borland was glad the supply of blood was available. She was grateful that she had given blood prior to her son's accident, and she continues to give blood whenever the opportunity arises.

"It is easy for me to give blood, and I am healthy," Borland said, "And I read often enough of the need."

Blood drives are held to replenish hospitals' inventory of blood for patients. Mountain View Hospital holds three to four blood drives each week at local businesses, high schools, universities and churches. Jenkins said the drives at these locations are usually very successful. Mountain View Hospital can collect from 40 to 80 units of blood at a single blood drive.

The blood collected on Saturday will be used in Provo and local hospitals within the area. None of the blood will be shipped out of state according to the Freedom Festival Magazine.

Due to successful blood drives in the Provo area, Mountain View Hospital has a sufficient supply of blood for their patients. But since the supply is constantly being depleted, continual blood donations are necessary. There is always a need for blood of all types according to Brenda Anderson, a donor technician at Mountain View Hospital.

Anderson also had an experience where she needed blood and she was glad the blood was available. After giving birth to one of her children Anderson woke up with a unit of blood next to her bed.

"That is when you pray everyone has done their job and donated blood," said Anderson.

Mountain View Hospital will be holding their next blood drive at BYU on July 10.

Nu Skin to host ice festival

By Jon Madsen

Nu Skin announced last week it will host the Provo ice sculpture festival Feb. 8 through 24.

The festival will be called Nu Skin's Olympic World of Ice.

"Some things about these Olympics haven't been positive, but now ... we're seeing some excitement," said Provo Mayor Lewis K. Billings.

Several ice sculptures were unveiled during the ceremony as examples of the work that would be showcased during the festival.

The sculptures included two ice signs on pillars representing Provo and Nu Skin. A larger sculpture of the Eiffel Tower was also displayed. Chuck Cooper, president of the National Ice Carving Association, put the finishing touches on the tower.

The festival will be located in downtown Provo and will feature ice carvings representing regions from every continent except Antarctica, the only continent completely covered in ice.

The event will not only have ice sculptures and ice sculpting competitions but also an ice skating rink, nightly entertainment performances, food booths, an Olympic pin-trading booth and a projection on the side of the Nu Skin building showing live coverage of the 2002 Winter Olympics.

Milosevic's lawyers plan defense

Associated Press

THE HAGUE, Netherlands — Dobrodan Milosevic's lawyers arrived at the prison Monday to map plans with their client for his historic court appearance, when the former Yugoslav president must answer charges stemming from his brutal crackdown against Kosovo Albanians.

Tribunal spokesman Jim Llanale said as of Monday afternoon, Milosevic had not submitted the name of any lawyer as his defense counsel ahead of Tuesday's arraignment.

The meeting at the prison with lawyers Zdenko Tomanovic and Branislav Krgovic was intended in part to resolve the issue of who would represent Milosevic at the court session Tuesday.

Milosevic has refused to acknowledge the validity of the court, established by the U.N. Security Council in 1993 to try those believed responsible for atrocities committed in the Balkan wars of the past decade.

He is the first head of state to be indicted by the U.N. court. The indictment charged him with crimes committed in 1992-1995, the 59-year-old former autocrat encouraged and supported the Balkan conflicts.

Milosevic also received an offer of legal help on Monday from a London-based lawyer, Ramsey Clark, who served as attorney general under President Lyndon Johnson. Clark told Milosevic he was considering joining Milosevic's defense team but that he would not be able to lead in the case.

Clark, who had been an outspoken opponent of NATO's bombing campaign of Yugoslavia, said he was holding talks with Milosevic's lawyers. He said the United Nations, "coerced by the USA," was behind the charges against Milosevic. He said he had not spoken with the former president.

Describing the U.N. tribunal as "illegitimate," Clark — a frequent critic of his own government — said he would do "anything I could to address the issues of legality of that court and its jurisdiction and its conduct and to defend Yugoslavia."

At The Hague, the lawyers, Tomanovic and Krgovic, arrived at the tribunal to confer with court officials. They later went to the U.N. wing of a Dutch penitentiary on the edge of this coastal city for the meeting with Milosevic.

It was unclear whether either of them would represent Milosevic at the arraignment. Krgovic said the decision would be made during the meeting.

The meeting was delayed because Milosevic's luggage, which they carried for him from Belgrade, got lost at the Amsterdam airport, Tomanovic said. The luggage contained the clothes Milosevic would wear at Tuesday's hearing.

Milosevic has been held in a single-occupant cell since Friday, after he was handed over to tribunal officials by the pro-democracy government in Serbia, the main Yugoslav republic.

Also Monday, Yugoslav President Vojislav Kostunica and other Serb pro-democracy leaders held talks about the composition of a reshuffled Yugoslav Cabinet, following the resignation last week of the Yugoslav prime minister, Zoran Djindjic, over the extradition.

Milosevic and four close aides were indicted by the tribunal in May 1999 on four charges in connection with the Kosovo crackdown, which ended a month later after a 78-day NATO bombing campaign and the withdrawal of Yugoslav forces.

Milosevic is the only one of the five accused in custody. Tribunal officials expect to file new charges against Milosevic by October in connection with wars in Croatia and Bosnia-Herzegovina, which he purportedly encouraged and supported.

On Tuesday, Milosevic, who was removed from office in October, will appear in a compact courtroom in the gray tribunal building in an outlying district of this coastal city.

He will be asked by trial judge Richard May to respond individually to each of the four charges: deportation, a crime against humanity; murder, a crime against humanity; murder, a violation of the laws or customs of war; and persecutions on political, racial and religious grounds, a crime against humanity.

He faces life imprisonment if convicted of any of the four charges.

If Milosevic refuses to enter a plea, the court will grant him 30 days to think about it. If no written plea is entered by then, the court will enter a "not guilty" plea for him so the trial can proceed.

Hospitality tents not to be erected at Olympic games

Associated Press

SALT LAKE CITY — The Salt Lake Organizing Committee has scrapped its plan for hospitality tents at four of five outdoor venues during the 2002 Winter games.

For a price, ticket holders would have been able to get out of the cold and buy a warm drink.

SLOC still plans such a facility at Deer Valley Resort, the of alpine slalom racing, mogul skiing and freestyle aerial acrobatics.

But, the tents will not be erected at Snowbasin Ski Area, Utah

Olympic Park, Soldier Hollow or Park City Mountain Resort.

"By the time we got all the operational and broadcast facilities brought to closure in May, we reassessed the (hospitality) program and it didn't fit in," said SLOC Chief Operating Officer Fraser Bullock. "We got overcrowded at those venues and didn't have adequate space to make it work."

The facilities could have netted $1 million for SLOC if all five sites had attracted maximum crowds at $125 per person, Bullock said.

That revenue was never counted as secure revenue in the effort to balance the $1.3 billion budget for the 2002 Winter Games.

"The program was somewhat revenue driven," Bullock acknowledged. "But we will lose costs as well as revenues. Operationally, not doing it simplifies things because it's one less thing to do. At this point, we're always looking for ways to simplify."

SLOC will have to refund about $350,000 to an estimated 2,800 purchasers of the hospitality passes.

Bullock still expects the Deer Valley program to bring in $100,000 to $200,000.

Cuban spies moved from general prison population

Associated Press

MIAMI — Five Cuban agents convicted last month of spying on the United States have been moved from the general prison population to isolation cells without explanation to their lawyers.

The Bureau of Prisons hasn't said why, and there's no reason to believe we can see," defense attorney Howard Horowitz said Monday. He was given after the verdict, they've been kept in general population for a couple of weeks with no incidents and no problems."

The Federal Detention Center issued a statement Monday saying only that the inmates were moved for "nonpunitive" reasons.

The five were transferred Tuesday to the Special Housing Unit, six days after the Cuban government responded to their conviction with newspaper articles and TV specials praising them as heroes.

A letter attributed to them was also published in the official Communist Party newspaper in Havana, in which they said they "honored our duty to our people and our homeland" and were "in no way repentant."

"If it has to do with the letter, then I guess so much for exercising your First Amendment rights," said defense attorney Jack Blumenfeld.

In the SHU, inmates and visitors sit on opposite sides of a window, and a small slot can be used to exchange paper.

Inmates are usually placed in solitary because of disciplinary problems or concerns for their safety or the security of the prison.

Three of the Cubans face life sentences.

Provo bans open fires

By Carol-Lyn Jardine

Another year of dry weather brought fire closure notices from Provo and Utah County fire marshals, banning open fires, charcoal barbecues and fireworks.

The Provo closures include all undeveloped wild lands, canyons and foothill areas incorporated in Provo City, said Provo fire marshal, Dennis Jones.

Jones said fire closures are expected to last throughout the summer.

Tom Wroe, Utah County Fire Marshal, issued a fire closure Monday covering undeveloped areas of Utah County.

"We are following the lead of federal and state by issuing a class one closure," said Wroe.

Class or stage one closures limit fires to campgrounds with designated fire areas, said Teresa Rigby of the Salt Lake field office of the Bureau of Land Management.

Stage one closures require smokers to stay within developed campgrounds, within vehicles or within a three-foot area that has been cleared of flammable materials while smoking.

Utah County fire marshals did not impose fire restrictions. So, any fireworks legally purchased in Utah will be allowed in Utah County.

Officials said they hope to keep Provo's susceptible areas safe from fire damage throughout the dry season.

According to Miller, closures have been effective fire prevention in the past.

"Last year we only had a few small fires that were quickly contained because we had the closures in effect," said Miller.

Among the areas affected by the closure, is the park maintained by Provo City in South Fork Canyon.

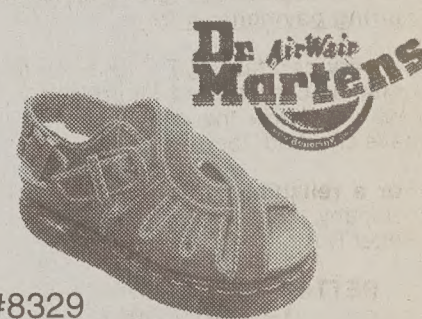

Though campfires are prohibited, charcoal fires for cooking are allowed in fire pits at the South Fork Park, Miller said.

Wroe suggests anyone planning to use illegal fireworks or building open fires in unapproved areas should think twice about it.

"The cost can be charged for the extinguishments of the fire to whoever caused it," said Wroe.
